"The PBSA is for me an invaluable resource. It not only keeps me abreast of my particular area of interest (19th C. Anglo-American bibliography and printing history), but also introduces me to other areas of bibliographical research, and through its book reviews to new bibliographical publications. The articles are thoroughly researched and extremely well written" -- David J. Supino

"For me the bibliographical society was always my primary membership. I learned from back issues of the papers. I used its publications. I attended virtually all the annual meetings, and I served it in every way that I could. I regret none of the efforts I made in its behalf, and I look forward to many happy years of participation". -- Roger Stoddard

"The Papers of the Bibliographical Society of America constitutes one of the few existing vehicles by which scholarship in the fields of bibliography is communicated. Now in its 103rd year, it has a long and honorable history of service to learning and is the principal, intellectual ornament of our Society. With the recent, dismaying suspension of the Proceedings of the American Antiquarian Society, long its associate in the field, the continued existence of PBSA becomes all the more important to workers in the field who, like me, depend upon it for the breaking of new light upon this basic discipline of bibliography".-- Marcus A. McCorison

"PBSA is one of the most important benefits of membership in this organization. Elegantly designed, handsomely illustrated, it is one of the most readable and versatile of bibliographical journals, every issue containing something of interest to librarians, collectors, literary scholars, textual editors, historians of printing, or anyone who studies books and manuscripts from medieval romances to modern first editions".--John Bidwell
